

“I shall return”

Above the ringing of the bells and the song of the whistles - above the praise of Presidents and Prime Ministers and Kings - Douglas MacArthur hears other voices.

From the long, quiet rows of white crosses, the men of Bataan and Corregidor speak - and no worldly praise could be as sweet as their acclaim.

America will not forget what MacArthur did today. But engraved for all time on the tablets of history will live the deeds of these heroic dead who in the black days of that memorable spring, scanned sky and sea and waited for help that did not come - and gave “the last full measure of devotion” for the America they loved.

Their wait has ended. The red and white and blue of the flag they died for, waves again in the clear sweet light of freedom’s sun. Manila again looks up to the Stars and Stripes.

MacArthur has kept his promise.
